

Philipp Herrmann, MD, PhD, FEBO is a medical retina consultant, vitreoretinal surgeon and senior lecturer for Ophthalmology. He is head of the IRD clinic at the University Eye Hospital Bonn. His special interests lie in the field of inherited retinal disease and gene therapy. His research expertise and interest lies in the field of rare retinal disease, gene therapy and translational medicine, pathogenesis and therapy of age related macular degeneration and retinal imaging.

He studied medicine at the University of Lyon/France and Leipzig/Germany where he graduated in 2008 with distinction. He obtained his medical doctoral degree from the Paul-Flechsig Institute for Neuroscience at the University of Leipzig (highest distinction 'summa cum laude'). He received clinical training at the University Eye Hospital Bonn and Moorfields Eye Hospital London and passed the German and European Board exams for Ophthalmology in 2015 (Fellow of the European Board of Ophthalmology, FEBO). From 2010 until 2013 he was a scholar of German Research Foundation (DFG) at the Institute of Ophthalmology in London where he worked in on complement dysregulation in age related macular degeneration and obtained a PhD degree from the University College London (UCL) in visual neuroscience.